Details

Public finance is an inclusive field of study based on different disciplines. This book brings together studies in different fields of public finance, taking into account the problems experienced on a global scale. The inclusiveness of public finance has brought together eighteen different studies in this book, including theoretical, methodological and empirical studies about various taxation problems such as COVID-19 and fiscal policies about healthcare system, financial incentives and biomass energy worldwide, effect of tax wedge on inflation, and the evaluation of the problems in international tax law; also digitalization and cryptocurrencies and the social effects of taxation. The authors of chapters present some new models and policy suggestions in their studies.
